

The British Museum
Occasional Paper
Number 108

Catalogue of Stone Age Artefacts from Southern Africa in The British Museum

Peter Mitchell with contributions by
Alison Roberts, Alan Cohen and Karen Perkins

Publishers

The British Museum
Great Russell Street
London WC1B 3DG

Production Editor

Josephine Turquet

Distributors

The British Museum Press
46 Bloomsbury Street
London WC1B 3QQ

Occasional Paper No. 108

Catalogue of Stone Age Artefacts from Southern Africa in The British Museum

Peter Mitchell with contributions by
Alison Roberts, Alan Cohen and Karen Perkins

ISBN 0 86159 108 9

ISSN 0142 4815

© The Trustees of the British Museum 2002

Front cover: Acheulean handaxes and cleavers,
Pniel, Northern Cape Province, South Africa
(photograph, P. Mitchell)

For a complete catalogue giving information on the full range of available Occasional Papers please consult:

www.thebritishmuseum.ac.uk/occasionalpapers

or write to:

The Marketing Assistant
The British Museum Press
46 Bloomsbury Street
London WC1B 3QQ

Printed and bound in the UK by Antony Rowe Limited

Acknowledgements	v
<hr/>
1. Introduction and Geographical Background	1
The Scope of the Study	1
Physical Geography of Southern Africa	2
Physiography	2
Climate	4
Ecological zones	5
Historical Geography of Southern Africa	5
<hr/>
2. Southern African Archaeology and its Changing Relationship with Britain	9
Introduction	9
Colony and Metropole: The Antiquarian Era of Southern African Archaeology	9
The British Association for the Advancement of Science	11
Study and Research in the United Kingdom	12
British Archaeologists Working in Southern Africa	12
Based in Britain: Research Projects Conducted in Southern Africa	13
British Sources of Funding for Archaeological Research in Southern Africa	14
<hr/>
3. The History and Contemporary Significance of the Collections	17
Peter Mitchell and Alison Roberts
The History of the Collections	17
Where are the collections from?	17
When were they collected?	17
Who collected them?	21
The acquisition of Stone Age material from southern Africa by The British Museum	25
The Present Day Significance of the Collections	27
<hr/>
4. Terminology and Typology	31
Terminology	31
The historical development of Stone Age terminologies in southern Africa	31
Current terminologies for the southern African Early and Middle Stone Ages	34
Current terminology for the southern African Later Stone Age	35
Typology	39
Typological glossary	40
Raw materials	43

5. Gazetteer of the Southern African Stone Age Collections in The British Museum	47
Introduction: Organization of the Gazetteer	47
Concordance of Provenances of the Southern African Stone Age Collections of The British Museum	48
South Africa	55
Eastern Cape Province	55
Free State	69
Gauteng	81
KwaZulu-Natal	85
Mpumalanga	96
North West Province	98
Northern Cape Province	106
Northern Province	126
Western Cape Province	128
South Africa – no further provenance	143
Angola	145
Botswana	146
Lesotho	151
Mozambique	152
Namibia	155
Swaziland	157
Zimbabwe	158
<hr/>
Appendix 1. Southern African Stone Age Collections in the Department of Ethnography of The British Museum	179
<hr/>
Appendix 2. Other African Stone Age Archaeological Collections in The British Museum	183
Karen Perkins
<hr/>
Appendix 3. Stone Age Archaeological Collections from Southern Africa in other Museums in the United Kingdom	193
Alison Roberts
<hr/>
Appendix 4. Individual Collectors Represented in The British Museum Southern African Stone Age Archaeological Collections	209
Alan Cohen
<hr/>
Bibliography	221

Acknowledgements

Many people have helped to make this monograph possible and I should like to take this opportunity of thanking them all. In particular, I owe a tremendous debt to Alison Roberts, now of the Ashmolean Museum, Oxford, for the initial suggestion and for giving so much time and energy to facilitating access to The British Museum's collections and associated records, corresponding with other institutions and providing a sounding board for ideas. Both Alison and I should like to thank Jill Cook, Head of the Quaternary Section of The British Museum's Dept of Prehistory and Early Europe, who sponsored the project, organized access to the Department's collections and saw the Catalogue through to its publication with great enthusiasm and support. Both Jill Cook and Ray Inskeep deserve many thanks for reading, commenting on and significantly improving earlier drafts of the text. Of present and former staff of The British Museum's Quaternary Section we should like to thank Karen Perkins for preparing the collections for study and curation, Phil Dean for maps, Hazel Martingell for illustrations of stone artefacts from Alfred County Cave, Justin Morris and Mick Lindop. In addition, Stuart Airey and Alex Mackenzie both helped track down artefacts and references, while Dr Alan Cohen spared no effort in carrying out research on the lives of those responsible for accumulating The British Museum's southern African Stone Age collections; Appendix 4 represents only part of the effort that he put in and we have also drawn heavily on his researches in writing Chapter 3. Within the Department of Ethnography of The British Museum we should also like to thank Jim Hamill and Julie Hudson for providing the information used in construction of Appendix 1. Last, but by no means least, a heartfelt thank you to Josephine Turquet for her patience and perseverance in seeing the Catalogue through to publication.

Both Alison and I owe a further debt of gratitude to all those individuals at other Museums in the United Kingdom who took the time and trouble to reply to letters asking about southern African Stone Age collections in their care or biographical information on individual collectors. The comprehensiveness of Appendices 3 and 4 is owed to: Ms S. Beeby, Dr R. Boast, B. Chisholm, Ms B. Conradie, Ms B. Crozier, Ms S. Giles, Mrs W. Glover, Dr P. Hughes, Dr L. Keppie, Mr R. Langley, Mr K. Leahy, Fr T. McCoog, Capt. D. O'Reilly, Mr J. Parsons, Dr A. Prag, L. Rechtersthort, P. Sanders, Ms L. Stumpe, Mrs G. Turner, Dr L. Washington,

Mrs V. Ward and Mr P. Watson. A particularly big thank you is due also to Zoë Henderson and Sven Ouzman, both of the National Museum, Bloemfontein, Gwilym Hughes of the Dyfed Archaeological Trust (formerly University of Birmingham), Mary Leslie of the South African Heritage Resources Agency, David Morris of the McGregor Museum, Kimberley, Prof. Desmond Clark of the University of California, Berkeley, and Dr Roger Summers for providing information on individual collectors and answering other queries. Prof. Jeff Guy of the University of Natal, Durban, kindly drew attention to the archaeological connections of Bishop Colenso and his family.

My own interest in southern African archaeology is the result of a personal connection with two British archaeologists whose names figure prominently in the development of the subject in the sub-continent. Fittingly, both Ray Inskeep and Pat Carter worked in museum departments at different times of their careers and I hope they will not feel it presumptuous if I offer this work to them. Finally, voglio dire tante grazie a Gloria perchè mi ha fatto ricordare che c'è di piu nella vita di queste pietre.

Note: the catalogue was completed in early 1998 and reflects the state of archaeological knowledge of southern Africa at that time. For a more recent assessment that includes references to key papers published in 1998-2001 readers should look to P. Mitchell (2002) Archaeology of Southern Africa (Cambridge: Cambridge University Press).

Contact addresses

Peter Mitchell

Lecturer in African Prehistory, St Hugh's College,
Oxford OX2 6LE

Alison Roberts

Collections Manager, Department of Antiquities,
Ashmolean Museum, Beaumont Street,
Oxford OX1 2PH

Alan Cohen

42 Meadow Road, Pinner, Middlesex HA5 1ED

Karen Perkins

Department of Medieval and Modern Europe,
The British Museum, Great Russell Street,
London WC1B 3DG

