

Merv: a bibliography of published research

The 1992-2000 investigations at Merv involved surface, topographic and geophysical surveys, limited evaluation trenches and five major excavations which included a wide range of specialists both in the field and during post-excavation analyses. The aims and objectives were developed within the framework of three consecutive three-year collaborations. Full preliminary reports were published at the end of each season. Important PhD research has also been supported, and a number of specialist papers as well as popular articles have also been published. The results of the final analyses are being prepared as a series of monographs. The following bibliography is not exhaustive, but is designed to give an idea of the range of publications concerned with:

- the history of Merv
- the work of the International Merv Project
- earlier archaeological excavations at the site
- archaeological research within the Merv oasis
