Some of the millions of fascinating objects to be found in the museums across the UK are shown on this map. Where will you visit? Add your own museums and objects.

teachinghistory100.org
This page from the Teaching history with 100 objects guide by the British Museum illustrates a selection of the one hundred objects that can be used as teaching aids. The guide is designed to help educators explore various historical periods, cultures, and events through objects that represent important historical milestones. The guide includes a variety of objects, from ancient artifacts to contemporary items, each with a brief description and context providing a starting point for exploring some key aspects of history.

For example, the guide includes objects such as:
- A Roman legionary’s helmet, which provides insight into the military forces of the Roman Empire.
- The Bayeux Tapestry, an embroidered cloth in France, which depicts the events leading up to the Norman conquest of England in 1066 AD.
- A portrait of Queen Victoria, highlighting her role as the longest-reigning British monarch.
- The Shroud of Turin, an ancient cloth with a mysterious image, which has been the subject of much religious and historical debate.
- The Rosetta Stone, a stone slab inscribed in three ancient scripts, crucial for understanding the Egyptian script.

These objects are carefully selected to cover a wide range of historical periods and themes, from prehistoric times to modern history, allowing educators to explore topics such as the development of human societies, major events, technological advancements, and cultural expressions. The guide encourages educators to use these objects as starting points for in-depth discussions and activities, fostering a deeper understanding of history among students.