The Great Court lies at the heart of the British Museum building. It is the largest covered public square in Europe. The glass and steel roof is made from 3,212 panes of glass, no two of which are the same. The space was opened on 6 December 2000 by Her Majesty the Queen, Elizabeth II.

Lots of different shapes can be seen in the Great Court.

Begin by having a go at counting some of the triangles in the glass roof.

Now look around you and see if you can spot any of the shapes shown below.

Finally, after your walk around the Museum it is time to have a stretch and throw a few shapes of your own!
